

WILSON TIRED OF JOB, SAY POLITICAL FOES

Plans to Seat Secretary of State in 1916, It Is Further Declared.

SUPPORTERS SMILE AT STORY

Chief Executive Has Not Discussed Political Future, Even With Close Friends, and Probably Will Keep His Counsel Until Last Minute.

Washington, June 27.—The Evening Star of to-day prints the following story:

"According to a story that is going the rounds in circles that have not been friendly to President Wilson for a long time, the chief executive is heartily tired of the White House job, sick of the inopportunities of the criticism, misrepresentations, misundstandings and other little things that have made nearly every President but Roosevelt angry with himself and the political world at large. His sole aim now is to accomplish the big things he set out to achieve, establish a record he will feel proud of, and then turn his back upon the temptation of the presidency for another four years, adding a lullaby to his retirement that will accentuate his place in history, it is said.

Bryan Suggested Help.
"The next important feature of the attempt of some persons to fix the whole thing up for 1916 by suggesting to the public mind in advance just what is going to happen is that W. J. Bryan is to be the help apparent of the retiring President and given his fourth opportunity to run for the presidency.

"To-day people around the White House who know a few things smiled over the story. President Wilson contentedly played golf and chuckled, while Mr. Bryan sawed wood and said less than he meant.

"Those who are posted on White House affairs know that the President has not expressed to his intimate friends his purposes in 1916, and he will keep his counsel to the very last minute. It is believed that if he wants the Democratic nomination again he can have it, but he is not going to make any advance announcements as to his future ambitions in that way. Neither he nor his closest political friends have admitted that he has accepted the suggestion of what may happen, and it is suggested, upon what he would like to have done.

"Then, as to Mr. Bryan falling help to the strength and power, opinions are by no means unanimous. Mr. Bryan, it is pointed out, has been absolutely loyal to the President, supporting him to an unheard-of degree that he might not be accused of trying to put himself forward at the expense of his chief, but there are no evidences that Mr. Bryan stands any closer to the President than a half dozen other men who have stood by him through thick and thin, and who are credited with aspirations for the presidency.

"In a political way Postmaster-General Burleson has been the closest man in the Cabinet to the President. Mr. Wilson has relied on Mr. Burleson in nearly all political matters that have arisen, including the distribution of post-office patronage. Mr. Burleson is an astute politician, and the President has great faith in the Texan. Burleson's friends propose to put him forward for the Democratic nomination for the presidency—some day—probably two years from now, if Mr. Wilson should retire.

All Are His Friends.
Senator Kern, Ollie James and Hoke Smith and Vice-President Marshall loom up for the future. Kern and James have been relied upon by the administration in legislative questions in the Senate, and they are exceedingly close to Mr. Wilson. Mr. Marshall has not been necessary to the President in this respect, but he has co-operated in a satisfactory manner. The President, it is asserted, would not feel justified in supporting Bryan for President with such faithful friends as Kern, James, Smith and Marshall aspiring to the nomination.

"In the House, too, Representative Underwood has aided the administration on most of the big problems, although he has not come as near being the spokesman of the administration there as others. Speaker Clark has been loyal on others. Neither of these two men would find enjoyment in standing by while the President turned over the nomination to Bryan, it was said.

"It is seriously questioned whether, if President Wilson retired, he will be able to land the office for Mr. Bryan in the face of more than a half dozen other friends who would seriously object. The inside view to-day was that Carranza by all the military leaders who supported the revolution, and by all the subservient followers who have ratified this leadership when they joined the revolutionary movement. This leadership cannot be taken from Carranza unless by agreement of the majority of the military leaders.

"The military forces composing the Constitutional army are not Villa's forces, as it is sometimes understood. The statement concludes with an outline of the forces acting under Villa and those who have manifested their adherence to Carranza, the latter, it is declared, being numerically superior.

NO INSTRUCTIONS TO MEET MEDIATORS
Mr. Breceda and Luis Cabrera, another revolutionary agent, said they had received no instructions from General Carranza to accept the invitation to confer informally with the delegates to the peace conference regarding the internal affairs of Mexico. Both, however, intimated there was a probability of such a conference, and that it might occur next week.

SKETCHES TO BE MANIFEST ITSELF
Niagara Falls, Ont., June 27.—Some of the principals to the mediation conference here began to lose hope that General Carranza ever would permit his representatives to participate in the proposed informal conference with their Huerta delegates for the solution of Mexico's internal problems. No word came to any of the mediators to-day as to Carranza's intentions, and skepticism began to manifest itself.

The impression here is that while the Constitutional representatives in Washington, with whom the mediators are informally communicating, say they are desirous of bringing about the meeting, General Carranza thinks otherwise, and the military successes of his troops probably will increase his self-confidence and independence.

CALDERON WILL REACH WASHINGTON TO-DAY

Greensboro, N. C., June 27.—Fernando Inglesias Calderon, chief of the Liberal party in Mexico, and en route to Washington, arrived here this afternoon, leaving to-night for Washington. Calderon filed a message this evening to Rafael Zubaran, informing him he would arrive in Washington early on Sunday morning. Calderon's interpreter stated that Calderon is named as Carranza's delegate to the mediation conferences. "If the conference is held," he continued, "there may be something about interior affairs of the country, and then he will not represent any one."

PRESTON GIBSON INJURED

Washington Society Leader in Automobile Accident.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Salem, Mass., June 26.—Preston Gibson, a Washington society leader, son of former Senator Gibson, of Louisiana, and a nephew of Chief Justice White, of the Supreme Court, was badly shaken up to-night when the front wheel of his auto caught in the car tracks on the Babcock Street Bridge, and was torn off, overturning the machine. Gibson and his chauffeur, George Sandfield, were thrown out, but luckily escaped serious injury. They were motoring from Newport to Beverly Farms.

The Grand Rapids Furniture Journal in its Current Issue, Says—

"In the same section of the Richmond, Virginia, Times-Dispatch which devoted nearly two columns to the quarter-century progress of Snyder & Hundley, Inc., furniture retailers, were published the six furniture advertisements that are grouped in the accompanying reproduction. On the first page of the Industrial Section, in which the article and the advertisements were included, appeared a cut of the Snyder & Hundley store, four columns wide by nine inches in depth.

"Effective advertising, surely. Space gained in your daily newspaper through the identification of your store with local industrial and commercial progress will exert a lasting impression that mere 'blue sky' has ever been denied. Your business will be regarded less as private enterprise and more as a community accomplishment deserving of local admiration and support. Thirty-eight inches in the editorial column, to say nothing of the space occupied by the cut, were devoted to the story of Snyder & Hundley. We are confident that the proprietors of what is declared to be the greatest furniture house of the South would not attempt to estimate its value in space rates. The advertisements of the Richmond furniture stores have been reproduced in this connection chiefly to illustrate typical examples of seasonal appeal and to indicate the generous publicity policy of the Virginia merchants. The date of the issue was April 12. Two of the advertisements, it will be noticed, voice their appeal to the spring trade; a third is directed to the sale of porch furniture, the fourth to that of refrigerators and ranges and the final two to stock characteristics of the season.

"While none of the ads is individualized by features of make-up or composition, all are well written and within the bounds of discriminating advertising policy."—Advertisement.
